Norwalk Community College students who participated in Family Economic Security Program academic and financial coaching services, were almost twice as likely to graduate than other students and six times more likely to subsequently enroll in a four-year institution, according to research published by Fairfield County's Community Foundation's Fund for Women & Girls.

The research underscores that academic education combined with financial coaching and skills training is key for low-income communities' graduation rates. Without such support, graduation and financial success rates dramatically dip.

Participants in the Family Economic Security Program, an initiative of coaching services created Fairfield County's Community Foundation's Fund for Women & Girls and supported by Citi Community Development — including academic and financial coaching and career development — resulted in graduate rates of 50 percent compared to 32 percent for all Norwalk Community College students.

Moreover, 55 percent of students who received services enrolled in a four-year college after graduation compared to nine percent of the general student population.

As a result of this research, the Fund for Women & Girls also announced the commissioning of a new study, The Evolution, Expansion and Evaluation of The Family Economic Security Program, on the impact of similar coaching services provided by the organization for students of Housatonic Community College (HCC) since last year.

“We are very encouraged by the findings of the Family Economic Security Program research. Our deepest gratitude goes to our incredible supporter, Citi, for helping us create this pathway to success. Norwalk Community College and Housatonic Community College have been committed, dedicated partners on this journey,” stated Juanita James, CEO and president of Fairfield County's Community Foundation.

“We hope the information contained in The Evolution, Expansion and Evaluation of The Family Economic Security Program creates impact not only in Fairfield County, but throughout Connecticut and nationally,” she said.

“High-quality financial empowerment services are a key ingredient for building more inclusive cities,” said

Eileen Auld, NY Tri-State Market Director, Citi Community Development. “Through the Family Economic Security Program, students gain access to services that are critical to expanding economic opportunity for themselves and their families.”

With continued support from policymakers, educators, donors and advocates, the Family Economic Security Program has the potential to change the paradigm and empower students to persist and pursue a degree that leads to family-sustaining employment.
