What do five kids ranging in age from 5 to 14 who live in Greenwich, Stamford, Darien and New Canaan all have in common? They all live with type 1 diabetes and have volunteered to walk the fashion runway at Catwalk, an annual fundraising event for JDRF.

Dariente is the leading organization funding type 1 diabetes (T1D) research to transform the lives of people with the disease — to make day-to-day life with T1D easier, safer and healthier and ultimately find a cure.

This year there will also be a 1st Grand Prize Raffle with a fine diamond necklace from D’Errico Jewelry of Scarsdale.

Now in its seventh year, Catwalk has proven to be an afternoon of fashion, food and fun where guests can enjoy a cocktail reception, lunch and designer pop-up shop.

Kids with Diabetes on the Catwalk

This will be the fifth time Isabelle Carpenter, Delilah Brien and Ryan Sklover (all of whom are age 14 and have type 1 diabetes) will walk the Catwalk.

Although they admit to being a little nervous about tripping in their high heels, they agree that it is a very special occasion in which they are not concerned about their usual fashion issue: having the outline of their insulin pump show through their clothes.

“Random people ask me what my pump is and it used to make me feel really self-conscious,” said Delilah.

“It’s always showing,” agreed Ryan. “But when I step onto the runway at Catwalk and everyone knows why I am there, I can just have fun.”

Type 1 Diabetes

Type 1 diabetes (T1D) is an autoimmune disease in which a person’s pancreas stops producing insulin, a hormone people need to get energy from food. T1D strikes both children and adults and has nothing to do with diet or lifestyle. There is currently nothing you can do to prevent it.

People with T1D must regularly monitor their blood sugar level, inject or continually infuse insulin through a pump, and carefully balance their insulin doses with eating and daily activities throughout the day and night.

However, insulin is not a cure for diabetes, and even with intensive disease management, people with T1D are at risk for devastating complications such as heart attack, stroke, blindness, and amputation.

What They're Looking Forward To

Naomi Wiegenfeld, just 5 years old and diagnosed with type 1 diabetes about 2 years ago, is looking forward to modeling in Catwalk with her older brother, Tamir, who is 7 years old.

Naomi is clearly a budding fashionista; a stylish mini crossbody handbag holds an iPhone that connects wirelessly to a Continuous Glucose Monitor she wears on her body in addition to her insulin pump. The Continuous Glucose Monitor helps her manage her blood sugar from minute-to-minute.

Although she makes it a fashion statement, Naomi wishes she didn't always have to carry a purse and phone. "No other 5-year-old has a phone," said Naomi.

When asked what they would wish for from the Catwalk donations to JDRF, the 14-year-old girls agreed that it would be wonderful to have options for a less visible insulin pump. But Isabelle spoke for them all when she said, "More importantly, it would be amazing to make insulin pumps and continuous glucose monitors accessible to kids who can't afford them."

All of these volunteer models hope to raise more money this year than ever before. And Naomi and Tamir hope that there will be ice cream at the Catwalk lunch.
