Today the Darien League of Women Voters announced the winners of High School video competition. Students were challenged to create a 30 second video PSA (public service announcement) about the importance of voting. Submissions were judged on three categories: adherence to message about the importance of voting, video quality and overall communication effectiveness.

Professional judges included:

- Jim Cameron, founder of Darien government access cable channel TV79 and president of Cameron Communications Inc.,
- Shannon Silsby, principal of professional recruitment firm, Perpetual Insights Inc. and former brand manager for several Unilever Co. products and
- Fairfield County professional videographer Matt Shea of mattofallmedia.com.

Each provided substantial feedback on the students' message and video content.

The student video competition supports the Darien League of Women Voters' mission as a national, non-partisan, political organization that encourages the informed and active participation of citizens in their government.

Editor's note: The original announcement appears to have had the wrong spelling ("Simpson") for Tyler Stimpson's name, and we've now changed that here. We've also added two more videos that we didn't see the first time we looked on Youtube.
