In front of Town Hall and before almost 100 friends and supporters rallying there with signs and frequent applause, elected officials on Monday repeated demands to keep Scott Hapgood, charged with manslaughter in Anguilla, safe when he's there and treat him fairly in the judicial proceedings against him.

"We want fair and transparent proceedings and safety for Scott Hapgood as he goes through this," U.S. Sen. Richard Blumenthal said. The judicial process on the island, a dependency of the United Kingdom, must provide him "basic safeguards of fundamental fairness," the Connecticut senator said.

All the public officials who spoke, along with one of Hapgood's lawyers, made the same points: Anguillan officials need to keep Hapgood safe and the proceedings against him fair. Hapgood's next pretrial hearing takes place on Nov. 11. After that, the magistrate now hearing the case will decide if it proceeds to trial, with or without a jury.

Blumenthal said he, U.S. Sen. Chris Murphy and U.S. Rep. Jim Himes have been in touch with the U.S. State Department to press the United Kingdom and Anguilla governments to provide for Hapgood's safety and rights.

Hapgood was charged with manslaughter in April after fighting in his hotel room with an employee who, Hapgood said, had arrived claiming to fix a sink that wasn't broken and then attempted to rob the family.

A toxicology report released much later showed the man, Kenny Mitchel, had enough cocaine and other substances in his blood to be the primary cause of his death, although prosecutors continue to accuse

Hapgood of killing the man in the fight.

Hapgood thanked his friends for coming out and showing his support:

- "I'd personally like to thank this wonderful community, including kids — at this point his voice momentarily cracked with emotion — friends, teachers and schools. Your support gives my family strength as we go through this ordeal. We're still in shock that a simple vacation that we looked forward to for so long turned into a nightmare.
- "All we wanted to do was vacation as a family. This nightmare is my new reality. I have not been allowed to return to work, where I've worked for over 20 years. I have been disqualified from coaching my kids' sports teams, which gave me a sense of purpose. I go back and forth to Anguilla in the face of significant dangers to make sure that the facts come out, because the hard science shows what really happened."

First Selectman Jayme Stevenson, the first at the podium, said that what happened in Anguilla "has become a nightmare for the Hapgoods, for our community and for the nation and beyond. As a parent of five children myself, I know that Scott did what any parent would do, what any of us here would do, protect his children from a highly intoxicated and crazed man."

She added: "The Hapgood family has been through the unthinkable, I don't think any of us can quite imagine, and I applaud them for making every effort to fully participate in the judicial process in Anguilla. Scott Hapgood is doing this to clear his good name and bring peace and closure to his family.

"We're here today to stand with and beside the Hapgood family as a community and to ask for transparency, fairness in the judicial process and safe passage for Scott as he travels back to Anguilla in a few days."

Although U.S. Rep. Himes and Sen. Murphy weren't at the news conference, statements from them were read, largely repeating what Blumenthal said about keeping in touch with State Department officials and urging U.K. and Anguillan officials to safeguard Hapgood's rights.

Weeks ago, following a segment about Hapgood on the "Fox and Friends" television show, President Trump tweeted that he wants to make sure Hapgood's rights are protected and that he would look into the matter. Blumenthal said the White House legal counsel's office has become involved in the case.

State Rep. Terrie Wood, a friend of Hapgood's parents, said she's known Scott Hapgood since he was 4 years old. "I watched Scott grow up. [...] I watched him [...] come back to this community and bring his family back here to grow his family and have the same experience here.

"By virtue of so many people being here, it's evidence that Scott cares deeply about this community, and he's a good person," Wood continued. "He's not a man looking for trouble. Trouble came his way, and now it's a situation he tragically has to deal with. It's upended his family, but we are all here to support you, and I think you know that."

Hapgood's Full Statement

Hapgood said this, read from a prepared statement:

As incredibly difficult as the last six months have been, there are days like this when I'm reminded how much support we have from friends, family our community and our elected officials. [...]

Hapgood thanked Blumenthal for his "hard work, publicly and behind the scenes," as well as Himes, Murphy, state Reps. Matt Blumenthal, Terrie Wood; state Sens. Carlo Leone and Bob Duff; and First Selectman Jayme Stevenson.

"We'd also like to thank White House counsel for their attention to this matter."

"And I'd personally like to thank this wonderful community, including kids — at this point his voice momentarily cracked with emotion — friends, teachers and schools. Your support gives my family strength as we go through this ordeal. We're still in shock that a simple vacation that we looked forward to for so long turned into a nightmare.

"All we wanted to do was vacation as a family. This nightmare is my new reality. I have not been allowed to return to work, where I've worked for over 20 years. I have been disqualified from coaching my kids' sports teams, which gave me a sense of purpose. I go back and forth to Anguilla in the face of significant dangers to make sure that the facts come out, because the hard science shows what really happened.

"My lawyers have made requests, which I repeat here, asking that the Anguillan prosecution takes a fair view of the facts which point to the logic that charges against me should be dismissed. I'd like to thank everyone for coming and for your continued support. Thank you."
