Pat Parlette and Matt Pavia

Pat Parlette, now in her 90s is a longtime town resident who has been an active volunteer in several town organizations. She's also no stranger to Darien events involving veterans.

In 1943, as the first girl drum major in the Darien High School band, she was part of the band's salute to departing World War II recruits at Darien railroad station.

When she graduated from Darien High School, she got a scholarship from funds raised at the Darien Community Association Thrift Shop, where she later volunteered for many years.

She joined the U.S. Cadet Nurse Corps in 1943 and was trained in helping polio victims on iron lungs. She trained as a nurse, graduating from Greenwich Hospital's nursing education program in 1946, then cared for polio patients at the Tripler Military Hospital in Hawaii.

Parlette worked for Seaboard World Airlines as a nurse/flight attendant, helping get troops home to the United States.

In 2008, she received the Community Civic Award from the Darien Old Timers' Athletic Association for "regular participation in community civic service of constant loyalty, unquestioned integrity, peerless leadership & sense of fair play" and "exceptional service to others in the finest American tradition."

Matt Pavia has taught American Studies and English at Darien High School for 16 years.

With his father, Tony Pavia, he is co-author of An American Town and the Vietnam War, about the men and women from Stamford who served in the Vietnam War, and their families at home, who worried about them.
