Darienite.com accepts letters to the editor about candidates running for office in the Nov. 8 election, but only up through the end of the day on Halloween, Oct. 31. Email your letter to dave@darienite.com.

Randy Klein, a Democrat, is challenging Republican state Rep. Terrie Wood in the 141st House District:

To the editor:

Connecticut faces many challenges as we approach Election Day. The budget, transportation and pension reform all require immediate, and meaningful action. Our current state representative has had eight years to address these problems, and her service is appreciated. However, it's time for a change.

Randy Klein's three point plan to get our economy moving will have an immediate impact on improving Connecticut's fiscal situation.

The plan focuses on: (1) balancing the budget (2) making it easier for businesses to open in Connecticut and create jobs and (3) investing in our transportation system.

Specific proposals include freezing employee wages, creating a 800 hotline to help startup companies navigate through a web of regulations, and passing a transportation fund lock box.

All of these ideas will help get Connecticut back to business. I urge fellow voters to put partisan politics aside and vote for Randy Klein on Nov. 8 for state representative.
