After a Darien man, 51, admitted that he'd smashed a television screen after a heated argument in his home, he was charged with disorderly conduct and arranged to leave the house, police said.

Darien police described the incident with this additional information, including accusations not proven in court:

Police were called to the home at 9:45 p.m. on Saturday, April 22. Another family member told police about the man punching the television screen in the living room and showed police other items around the house that the man had broken in previous incidents.

The man was given a summons to appear in court the following Monday morning.
