In two unrelated domestic violence incidents this past weekend, misdemeanor summonses were issued for people to appear in court, Darien police said.

Police gave these further details, including accusations not proven in court:

At 3:48 p.m., Friday, police were called to the area of the Post Road and Noroton Avenue on the report of a physical altercation between two people. Police were given a description of the people and located them.

The victim had "observable minor injuries" that police did not specify. Police determined that a 53-year-old Darien woman had caused them, so she was charged with breach of peace and was given a summons to appear in state Superior Court in Stamford.

In the other incident, police were called to a home at 1:30 p.m. and were told that an hour earlier, while in an argument, he or she had been struck by the suspect, a 61-year-old Redding man. He admitted that he struck the victim.
