About the Artists

Nash Hyon

Nash Hyon maintains a studio in Wilton working in encaustics (hot wax) and mixed media, continually experimenting with non-traditional tools and techniques.

Her primarily abstract paintings reflect her interest in nature, color, texture, process and the idea of transformation.

Her work has been widely exhibited, collected and she recently finished a commission of 11 paintings for an installation in New York City. Nash is on the faculty of Silvermine Arts Center, has studied painting in Italy and has a MFA degree from Vermont College.

Nancy McTague-Stock

Artist Nancy McTague-Stock grew up on the Chesapeake Bay in Virginia. She credits early exposure to environmental experiences as the impetus for her life long artistic focus.

Her environmentally focused imagery centrally highlights the fragility of nature in an increasingly technocentric world, through an amalgam of painting, printmaking and contemporary photographic media. Her work is observation-based, with a strong conceptual sensibility and superb craftsmanship.

Nancy has created commissioned, community-focused, interactive installations and designed community participation projects, global artistic exchanges and outreach programs. She has periodically lectured about contemporary art, environment and culture, and mentored artists about the university process.

She has also served as a teacher, curator and juror for many academic, private and public institutions for exhibitions, including The Prince of Wales Foundation in the UK.

Nancy lives on a nature preserve, providing a constant source of fodder for her work and maintains her studio in South Norwalk.
